NURSES AND MIDWIVES WELCOME REPORTS OF SA-BEST HEALTH POLICY'S EXISTENCE

The body representing South Australia's nurses, midwives and personal care workers has today welcomed news reports of Nick Xenophon's health policy and look forward to receiving a copy to analyse.

Reports of his health policy came hot on the heels of the Australian Nursing and Midwifery Federation (SA Branch)'s ad campaign launch, which called SA-Best out for a lack of health policy.

ANMF (SA Branch) CEO/Secretary Adj Associate Professor Elizabeth Dabars AM says she welcomes reports of the health policy and is relieved nurses and midwives will at last have something to analyse.

"As a key stakeholder representing more than 22,000 South Australian nurses, midwives and personal care workers, we look forward to receiving our copy of Mr Xenophon's health policy and the opportunity to discuss it with him directly," Ms Dabars says.

"The people working in our health sector and indeed community receiving these critical services deserve enough time to consider and engage with any proposed policy in a way that allows proper debate ahead of the election."
